Book of Centuries

Book I: The Oldest Times to the Birth of Christ

To the Keeper of this Book

This little book goes with you to the museum, so that what you see there may “all remain distinct and clear in your memory.”

Each opening is one hundred years: the ruled page on the left is for writing, the plain page on the right for drawing. This first book runs from the oldest times to the birth of Christ; the second book goes on from there.

Every ruled line stands for five years, and the little dots mark the single years. The figures at the end of the lines count the years of the century; before Christ they count backwards, so the last years before Christ are at the foot of the page. Write a name or a thing on its line, in its place along the line.

On the plain page opposite, draw something you have seen from that century, carefully, as it really is.

Some pages may stay empty for a long time. Little by little, as you visit and read, you will fill them.

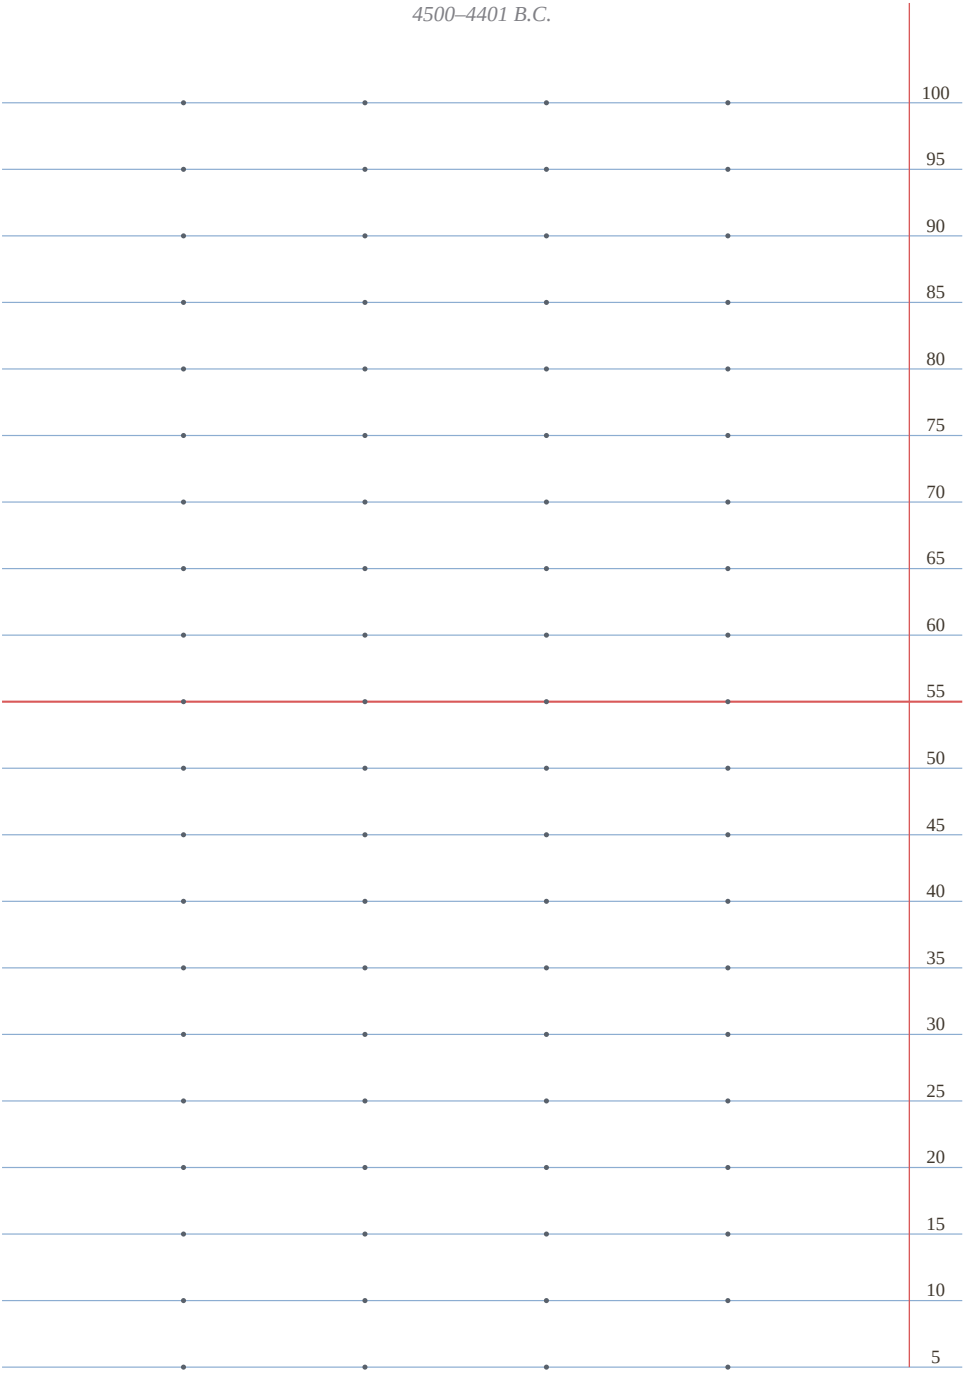

One century to each opening, a plain page for drawing facing a ruled page for writing, as in the interleaved Books of Centuries the P.U.S. children kept from 1914 (G. M. Bernau). A page for each hundred years, forty-five before Christ and twenty-one after, as in Mrs. Epps’s museum note-book (The Parents’ Review, 1906).
