Book of Centuries

To the Keeper of this Book

This is your Book of Centuries. Each century has its own two pages: the ruled page for writing, and the plain page opposite for drawing.

Every ruled line stands for five years, and the little dots mark the single years. The figures at the end of the lines count the years of the century, 5, 10, 15 and so on. So an event in the third year of a century goes in the middle of the first line, and Magna Carta, signed in 1215, goes at the end of the line marked 15 on the 13th Century page.

In the centuries after Christ the smaller numbers are at the top of the page; in the centuries before Christ it is the other way about, and the smaller numbers are at the bottom, so that the last years before Christ come at the foot of the page, and the figures count down from 100.

Write only a few words on each line: the name, the date, the thing that happened. Neat and true is better than long.

On the plain page draw something that belonged to that century, a tool, a ship, a coin, a building, copied carefully from a museum or a good picture. You need not be an artist to do this well.

At the back you will find pages for maps of the countries you read about, and a few double pages left free for whatever you wish to collect.

The pages follow Miss G. M. Bernau's directions in "The Book of Centuries and How to Keep One", The Parents' Review, 1928. Her book ended with the 20th Century; a page has been added for the 21st.
